Discover the historic beauties of Gotha!

The residential city Gotha is located in the green heart of Germany, in Thuringia – a town with the special flair of history and future. Gotha is the former capital and residential city of the Dukedom Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. Marked by a brilliant history the town has its own aura: the historic centre and the Friedenstein Castle - Germany’s biggest Early-Baroque castle complex with a park - landmarks and at the same time impressing events. Wide park areas in English style, the Orangery, the Friedenstein Castle, the Ducal Museum, the today’s Museum of Nature as well as bourgeois houses are fascinating the visitors.

Whether an individual visit or a guided city tour – the flair of the pompous past can be felt still today!
Villa Gotaha

The “Villa Gotaha” was first mentioned in a document issued by Charlemagne, king of the Franks, in the year 775, and is thus one of the oldest settlements in Thuringia. One of the most important East-West trade routes, the “Hohe Strasse (high street), went past the settlement on the so-called “good water”. Gotha has enjoyed a town charter since the 12th century and, with its fortified castle, very early achieved its strategic importance as the seat of the Thuringian landgraves.

Middle Ages

Due to its exceptional location, medieval Gotha became one of the most important centres for trade in Thuringia. In particular the trade with woad, a colouring plant, brought the citizens a good income and modest prosperity. Even today the splendid town-houses on the central market square (Hauptmarkt) are testimony to this era. The history of the town was shaped by important personalities. Apart from the reformers Martin Luther and Frederick Myconius the educationalist Andreas Reyher, whose “Gotha School Methodology” was one of the first school regulations in Germany, worked in Gotha.
of the Residential City

18th and 19th centuries

“City of Natural Sciences and Arts” is a nickname justifiably earned by the ducal seat of Gotha. Apart from the geologist and explorer Karl Ernst Adolf von Hoff (1771-1837), the astronomer Baron Franz Xaver von Zach (1754-1832), Johann Franz Encke (1791-1865) and Peter Andreas Hansen (1795-1874) also worked in Gotha.

Until 1943 the geographic publishing house founded by Justus Perthes in 1785 released the Gotha dictionary of the German nobility, world-famous as the "Gotha". With maps and atlases from Gotha the world view got a new colour.

In 1820 and 1827, respectively, the merchant Ernst Wilhelm Arnoldi (1778-1841) founded the first nationwide fire insurance bank and the first cooperative life insurance bank of Germany. In 1826 Josef Meyer (1796-1856) founded the Bibliographic Institute, one of the largest publishers of dictionaries in Germany and publisher of the encyclopaedia "Meyer’s Universal-Lexikon", which is still in existence.

The composers Gottfried Heinrich Stölzel (1690-1749) and Louis Spohr, the philologist Frederick Jacobs (1764-1847), the sculptor Frederick William Doell (1750-1816), the poet Frederick William Gotter (1746-1817), the historian and “Father of the Howler” Johann Georg August Galletti (1750-1828), the geologist Ernst Frederick von Schlotheim (1764-1832) and the founder of modern palaeontology Johann Gottfried Geissler (1726-1800) are inextricably linked with the international aura of the town.
Important conferences took place in Gotha. The "Deutsche Schützen-bund", the confederation of German shooting clubs, was founded in the "Stadthalle" ballroom in 1861 and the workers’ parties of Ferdinand Lassalle and August Bebel united to form the “Sozialistische Arbeiterpartei Deutschlands” (Socialist Workers’ Party of Germany) in 1875.

The industrialisation recognised Gotha as an important location of engineering, food industry as well as automobile- and waggon industry. In Gotha even aeroplanes have been built.

Interesting architectonic solutions from that time can be found on the outskirts of the old town.

After the tragedies and heavy destructions of the Second World War, the difficult years of reconstruction began. From 1950 to 1990 the townscape changed noticeably and new residential areas sprang up on the outskirts of the town.

More sustainably than all other wars the house Saxe-Coburg and Gotha “conquered” the European monarchical houses. From this house emerged the royal dynasties in Belgium, Portugal, Bulgaria and Great Britain in direct male succession. Descendants of Coburg-Gotha princes and princesses married into the imperial houses of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, the royal houses in Sweden, Greece, Spain and Norway, Italy, France and Denmark.

From 1837 to 1901 Queen Victoria had the regency over the British Empire for more than 63 years. Prince Consort Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha was her great love for the whole life. The house Saxe-Coburg and Gotha reigned now over the British Empire.

In 1837 Queen Victoria came to government and died in 1901 as Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and as Empress of India.

The successful wedding policy of her uncle was continued under her regency. Children and grandchildren of the “Grandmother of Europe” reigned almost throughout Europe. A guarantor for European peace as she and her Consort believed.
After the death of Victoria reigned her oldest son as Edward VII. and after 1910 his son as George V. George's cousin, Emperor Wilhelm II., was also a grandchild of the Queen Victoria and one of Wilhelm's nephews was Duke Carl Eduard of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. The second son of the English Queen, Alfred, became in 1893 the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha and reigned over the Dukedom for seven years. In 1914 the First World War began – as a consequence and from public pressure the British Royal House gave up its German name and renamed into “House Windsor”.

However, it is not only this root which connects this monarchical house of the island with Gotha. Already much more earlier Frederick, the Prince of Wales, came for his bride to Gotha. The English heir to the throne felt in love with the Gotha Princess Augusta of Saxe-Gotha and married her on 27th April 1736 in London.

Augusta is the mother of the first English King who was also born in England. George III. was born on 4th June 1737.

Due to his early death Prince Frederick could not ascend the throne himself. His bereaved wife completely dedicated herself to her children, the care of family relations to Gotha and the English garden art. She inspired her nephew – the Duke of Gotha Ernst II. – so that in Gotha the first English Landscape Park on the continent was created. The park can be experienced still today with newly-grown beauty.
Located in the middle of a spacious park and like a stone crown high above Gotha the Friedenstein Castle belongs to the most impressive German castle areas. Its unique collections make the museums of the foundation “Schloss Friedenstein” to an attraction with international importance.

1643, at the end of the Thirty Years’ War, Duke Ernst I. (“the Pious”) of Saxe-Gotha laid the foundation for a building – its name was a programme at this inhospitable time: Friedenstein. Already after 13 years the Castle was completed – it is said that it has so many rooms as the year counts days. At first the monument was surrounded by protective walls. At the end of the 18th century the fortifications were grinded (only the casemates are kept and can be partially visited). A park area was created which is the oldest English Garden on the continent and enjoys the attention not only from garden friends. The Orangery Garden is the oldest and loveliest part. Coming down from the Castle the visitor can experience the park like a blooming amphitheatre in summer.

To the south of the Castle the Ducal Museum is located, which was built at the end of the 19th century. Today the Museum of Nature is accommodated here. Based on the Ducal Natural Produce Cabinet it shows today for example exhibitions about the Thuringian Forest, protection of species and the famous Tambach Native Saurians.

The magnificent museum building stands for appreciation of art, interest in research and the joy to collect of the Gotha Dukes who made their residence to an island of muse. Its universal demand can be felt still today: beside the research library, which also accommodates the Ducal book stock in the Castle, the Thuringian State Archive is also located – since many centuries a place for state files. The Castle Church and the baroque Ekhof Theatre are also kept. The original stage technology of the theatre functions still today and can be experienced during the Summer Ekhof Festival.
The magnificent representation rooms of Friedenstein Castle are an attraction for all visitors – from the baroque ballroom and the classical chambers to the rooms with a balcony built in 1820 – all rooms of the Castle reflect the art epochs. The art collections of the Castle Museum, which are part of the Ducal art chamber, offer different works of art: Egyptian mummies, antique vases, traditional German paintings by Cranach, the famous “Gotha lovers”, a big collection of Dutch paintings, the biggest Houdon collection outside France, a big collection of porcelain from Thuringia, Meissen and Asia, a huge coin collection, art of the 20th century – these are only some objects with a wonderful art variety.

The Museum for Regional History and Folklore illustrates the history of Gotha and Gotha County. First of all it shows the everyday life of the citizens – thus it meaningfully completes the pomp of the historic Castle rooms.

The importance of the areas of the Friedenstein Castle as a cultural heritage of an international level is caused by the continuity of the ensemble of Castle, Castle church, theatre, library, archive, scientific collections, art collections and park since the early-baroque period which hardly cannot be experienced in that way anywhere else.
The townhall was built in 1574 according to the Grumbachschen Händeln (1567) as a massive building with Renaissance façade. Today it is the seat of the Lord Mayor.

Opening hours
Monday to Friday 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.
Saturday 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.
Sunday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. (May to September)

Historic Townhall
The townhall was built in 1574 according to the Grumbachschen Händeln (1567) as a massive building with Renaissance façade. Today it is the seat of the Lord Mayor.

Townhall Tower
Opening hours: every day 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.
Enterance fee: 0,50 € p.p.

Lower Main Market, Guild Hall
In 1820 E. W. Arnoldi has acquired the house for the grocers’ guild. Already in 1818 he founded the first German commercial school in this building.

New Market, Margarethen Church
Since 1675 the Protestant City Church has been the grave of family Duke Ernst I. of Saxe-Gotha-Altenburg and is often used as a concert church with a Schuke organ.

Tower of Margarethen Church
Opening hours:
Monday to Friday: 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.
with prior appointment

Butter Market
The name comes from the history when regional farmers sold their meat- and dairy products. All three market places show historic own labels as a symbol of families or the handcraft and house portals from Baroque and Renaissance.
Cranach – House and pump station, Main Market 17
In the two-storey baroque building Cranach’s wife was born. The family double coat of arms is on the right side of the portal. (Cranach’s winged snake, Cranach’s son-in-law Dasch, a bag). In the cellar of the house is located the pump station for the water art from 1895 is located.

Augustinian Church, Augustinian Street
Built as a Monastery Church the Augustinian Church was a part of the Monastery area of the monks of the Augustinian Eremite Order. Still today the beautiful Gothic Cloister from 1366 reminds of this time. It is the only one kept monastery area in the county.

From 1675 to 1680 the inside of the church was rebuilt and baroqueized under Duke Ernst I. A commemorative plaque reminds of several sermons of the Augustinian monk Martin Luther. The reformer Frederick Myconius, who was a friend of Martin Luther and died in Gotha in 1546, is buried here.

Water Art
The Leina Canal built in the 14th century for water supply was used at the end of the 19th century for water arts.

Friedenstein Castle
It is Germany’s biggest Early-Baroque castle complex. The historic continuity of the ensemble of Castle, park, church, theatre, library, archive and royal collections, which can be felt still today, is noticeable. Behind the simple exterior facade pompous royal chambers are hidden.

The origin of the much-vaulted art collections is in the Ducal Art Chamber which combined natural-history objects, works of art and curious things. Today there are Egyptian finds such as antique things, paintings by Cranach, sculptures of classicism, a huge coin collection, porcelain from Asia and Thuringia as well as modern art in the Castle museum.

A visit is possible on request +49 (0) 3621 5078570.
The most famous painting is "Gotha Lovers" which was created by the "Master of the Amsterdam Cabinet" around 1480 (the name is not known).

Opening hours of the castle and museums:
Tuesday to Sunday
May to October        10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
November to April     10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Casemates
The strongest baroque fortification in Middle Germany was built from 1655 to 1672. The constructions which lie today below the park show underground embrasure chambers, rifle galleries, back defences, conterminal shafts, elevator shafts and much more. Thus the 300 m long tour becomes an archaeological discovery journey.
